Summary

The Combined Annual Training Camp (CATC) equips cadets with fundamental military knowledge and skills. They receive basic training in drill, weapon handling, map reading, and survival techniques, which lays the foundation for advanced training and fosters a sense of preparedness and resilience. The camp also promotes teamwork and camaraderie, as cadets engage in group tasks and live collectively, learning cooperation and mutual respect. Participation in CATC leads to significant personal growth and character development. Cadets gain hands-on leadership experience, which enhances their decision-making abilities, confidence, and initiative, preparing them for future challenges. Through structured routines and exposure to a disciplined environment, they learn the importance of punctuality, respect for authority, and adherence to rules, positively influencing their behavior both within and beyond the camp. Moreover, CATC helps build self-confidence and motivation. The challenges and experiences encourage cadets to step out of their comfort zones, making them more resilient and self-reliant. The skills acquired and the certificates earned during the camp also enhance their prospects in higher education, public service, and careers in the armed forces.

Outcome of the Programme

1. Cadets gain hands-on experience in leadership roles, boosting their confidence, decision-making, and responsibility-taking abilities.
2. Cadets demonstrate enhanced personal discipline, punctuality, and respect for rules and authority.
3. Cadets learn to function as part of a team, improving interpersonal communication, cooperation, and respect for diversity.
